This event is underwritten in part through a grant from the Manfred & Fern Steinfeld Campaign Events Fund.
Larry David grew up in Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn and attended Sheepshead Bay High School. Of his youth, he says, “I had a wonderful childhood, which is tough because it’s hard to adjust to a miserable adulthood.” Not a surprising quote from a man whose alter ego came to life in the form of George Costanza on the television series, Seinfeld, which he co-created.

After attending the University of Maryland, David embarked on a career as a stand-up comedian in 1974. That career was peppered with odd jobs including cab driver, bra salesman, and private chauffeur. In 1979, he was hired as a writer and performer on the late night comedy series, Fridays. The show lasted until 1982, at which point he moved back to New York and eventually landed a job as a writer for Saturday Night Live.

A friend of Jerry Seinfeld since 1976, when the two were performing in comedy clubs, David became something of a legend in the business as a “comic’s comic” the one the other comics would come to see. In 1988, when Seinfeld was asked to develop a show for NBC, he solicited David’s advice and the two came up with the idea for the show, which debuted in 1989. David was the executive producer of Seinfeld for seven years.

For the last seven years, David has written and starred in his own television series for HBO, Curb Your Enthusiasm. David will also star in Woody Allen’s next film, currently untitled, due for release in 2009.
